“Science and the Environment in the Arctic”

Professor Stephen Bocking, SPEAKER Chair, Environmental and Resource Science/Studies Program, Trent University

Professor Stephen Bocking is the Chair of the Environmental and Resource Studies Program at Trent, where he has taught since 1994 and which was the first environmental science program to be accredited by ECO Canada.

His research explores aspects of environmental science and politics, both historically and in contemporary contexts. He is the author of Nature's Experts: Science, Politics and the Environment (2004) and has published widely on Canadian environmental issues including scientific practice in the north, urban environments, aquaculture and fisheries, the relationship of the sciences and the humanities, and environmental studies education.
